It's very aesthetic. The soundtrack is pretty good. I just don't see myself playing it for more than the 20 minutes I did because I've seen all there is to see, which isn't much. The idea behind it is good, but it lacks inspiration and it's lazy. So, though this is something that's clearly meant to be played for hours on end, it just doesn't have the substance. There has to be something there, a reason to go on. There has to be something satisfying. There are many examples of games that do this sort of thing successfully.
